

CK WEARDEN

About the Artist...

CK Wearden made a commitment to her art in 1974 and by 1977 was taking awards in drawing and painting. By 1978, portraits of “Native Americans” began to grace the surfaces of her canvases.

Primarily self-taught, CK would travel from her home in Sun Valley, ID to Jackson, WY and study paintings by some of the top western artists in the USA.

Influenced by impressionists and old masters, her greatest personal discovery was of James Dine. His work set her free to experiment with all media. Then straight out of Southwest Art Magazine, coming directly to her every month, was the infamous Fritz Schoelder, a new and shining star in the Southwestern art world. What greater influences could a young artist ask for!

Today, CK Wearden paints in series, or bodies of works, and has given them titles. Her latest series, the “Holy Ones,” began taking form in 2008 and is now available in Limited Edition Giclée prints.
